- Abstract: During the Great War, Louis Dumur was on the move between Switzerland and France. Familiar with the political and media spaces of both countries, he never ceased, even after the Armistice, to disseminate his personal truth, thanks to a publishing strategy that evaded censorship. In journals as diverse as the Cahiers Vaudois or the Mercure de France, he thundered against the German abuses and denounced what he saw as the Germanophilia of the Swiss government.
